We found that melatonin enhanced the in vitro generation of neutrophils from human bone marrow (BM) by a mechanism that was concentration-dependent and time-dependent. In parallel, melatonin increased the generation of neutrophils by these haematopoietic precursors in the neonatal rat spleen and BM. In contrast, in the adult rat, melatonin did not enhance haematopoietic stem cell (HSC) proliferation. In fact, it inhibited the CFU-GEMM, BFU-E and CFU-GM proliferation, in a concentration-dependent and time-dependent fashion, especially in the adult rat. These effects of melatonin on BM progenitors were enhanced by triiodothyronine (T3) and suppressed by glucocorticoid; indicating that melatonin can interact with the steroid and thyroid hormones at the haematopoietic level. Experiments with antibodies blocking cell membrane melatonin receptors indicate that the enhancement of cell proliferation is due to an involvement of the MT-I and MT-II receptors. Also, the antibodies to MT-I and MT-II enhanced BM progen

Moonshot - The Great Espionage is a 1959 British spy film directed by Guy Hamilton. It starred Robert Newton, James Mason, Deborah Kerr and Marjorie Anderson. The plot concerns a secret agent who must keep an airline pilot from defecting to Communist Russia. Plot Jim Hawkins (Robert Newton) works as an airline pilot and uses his job to spend time with his girlfriend Billie (Deborah Kerr). When Jim arrives in London on a flight from Paris, he is arrested by British intelligence agents, who reveal him to be a Russian agent. His mission is to bring a Russian agent, Marie (Marianne Koch), to England for interrogation, but their first attempt fails because she has a sudden breakdown while Jim is carrying her. Jim is taken into custody, but he manages to escape on probation for traffic offenses, and heads for the coast. While on the run, Jim is contacted by an officer under his Soviet control, who wants to talk about the previous day's meeting. He notices Jim is suffering from cabin fever and suggests meeting at a hotel, where he is instructed to kill Jim if he sees the police. At the hotel, Marie attacks and kills the officer, and escapes from the hotel. Jim, who is in possession of a new identity card thanks to the officer, goes to a chemist where he buys a new identity card and a pair of sunglasses, planning to use the latter to fool the Russian agents he is meeting. The chemist warns him to have the frames repaired before he travels to Moscow, as the customs officials will see the tinted lenses and assume he is an agent with American secrets to sell. As he goes to the airport to catch a flight to Paris, Jim runs into the two agents who captured him in France, having spotted him under the sunglasses. They are told to kill Jim if he goes to the airport, and they ambush him as he steps out of a taxi. He flees to the airport, but they tail him to the women's toilets in the basement of the terminal, where he encounters Billie, who seems to have gone for a walk. As they talk, he is confronted by the two Russian agents, who take him into custody. Jim is still a major problem to the Russians, and they attempt to find out his connection to Billie. He refuses to talk to the Russian officer at first, but is later ordered to the interrogation room with a harsh Russian officer. Over the course of the interrogation, the man claims

My Best Friend's Girl My Best Friend's Girl is a 1933 American pre-Code comedy-drama film directed by John G. Blystone, from a screenplay by Wesley Ruggles and John Farrow, who later worked together on the screwball comedy Go West, Young Man. It was produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer (M-G-M), and stars Shirley Temple and Nelson Eddy. A billboard for the 1933 film in the United Kingdom heralded the title as "My Boss' Girl", and that's the title the film was released in Britain under. Plot Shirley Temple stars as Janey Marlowe, a rich, rebellious young girl who is sent to reform school when her overbearing father (Edmund MacDonald) throws her out of her home after learning that she has engaged in an illicit relationship with one of his customers. Janey gets more involved in a stolen necklace that one of her classmates was planning to sell to satisfy her gambling debts. At the reform school, she meets two fellow ex-convicts, Bill Warner (Nelson Eddy) and Alf Garnett (Lloyd Hughes). Bill is a handsome but disillusioned former actor; Alf is a surly ex-con who has made some money with his own invention, the ping-pong projector, so is preoccupied with its success. Janey befriends Bill and initially feels attracted to him, but sees through his phony lifestyle as a self-obsessed, shallow playboy and accepts Alf's assessment of him as "a slug". Her school mentor, Mr. Wilkins (played by Owen Davis), reveals that Janey's boyfriend is really a con man named Torrence, who is going to sell the necklace and so will be shipped out of town. Wilkins also reveals that Janey's father has hired him to oversee her reform
