grew weary of the endless headliners. They turned to the rapper Wilco, who were just warming up to a set. "It's so dark, no one can see anything," they pleaded. These are the pressing issues that compel broadcasters to deploy the maximum amount of decibels. That night's headliners were Pearl Jam. The muddy fields of southern Tennessee were awash in L.E.D. lights, towering speakers, and roughly two dozen quasi-military-looking security guys wearing reflective vests as they moved through the crowd. This was a smart marketing move by the festival's organizers, who wanted their attendees to feel like they were supporting a military action. Jeff Tweedy, Pearl Jam's lead singer, spoke the language of occupiers and soldiers, urging his listeners to choose between the good and the bad, between equality and inequality. "You could get me a thousand times more pumped up to see Pearl Jam than any other headline act at this festival," he said. "There are so many things I love about this band. But I love them because they can't be compromised. Because they don't try to work in the interests of business and their personal career. Because they really don't care. I love them because they are fully committed to what they do."OK, the Secret Service is supposed to protect the president no matter what. Except when he's on the road and needs to get from point A to point B, he needs a Secret Service helicopter to take him on his supersecret airplane. No, he can't use the elevators, either. There's a reason those are called "secret.◆
